New Memoir Explores the Unbreakable Bond Between Humans and Their Fur Babies

For fans of Marley & Me and Must Love Dogs, Mommy's Boy is a heart-warming tale that will have you smiling through tears and hugging your fur baby a little bit tighter.

Indianapolis, IN — Author Jennifer Huston Schaeffer's new book, Mommy's Boy: How My Doggie Soulmate's Love Rescued Me, is a touching memoir that will resonate with anyone who's ever experienced a deep bond with a pet. In Mommy's Boy, Schaeffer tells the emotionally charged true story of her journey with her dog, Benny, exploring themes of unconditional love, companionship, dating drama, grief, guilt, and personal growth. "This book is a heartfelt tribute to Benny, who was like a son to me," says Schaeffer. "One reason I wrote it is to demonstrate the profound effect pets can have on people, particularly those suffering from shyness, anxiety, loneliness, and depression. In addition, I hope it will offer solace and comfort to pet parents who have lost a fur baby, while at the same time, help them hold on to the positive memories of their pets so they can move forward in their healing journey."

Mommy's Boy is 286 pages, including a photo gallery, and is available in hardcover, paperback, and e-book through Amazon, Barnes & Noble, Bookshop.org, and other retailers.

"Mommy's Boy is an absolute must-read for dog lovers. . . . It's for anyone who's ever rebuilt themselves after heartbreak, found love in unexpected places, or realized that sometimes, the best relationships aren't the ones we're conditioned to chase. . . . If you've ever known the kind of love that only a dog can give, this book will feel like home." —Literary Titan
